9 ALVIN SMART, No. C 09-3127 CW (PR)
10 Petitioner,

11 v. ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR WRIT 12 KELLY HARRINGTON, Warden, OF HABEAS CORPUS; DENYING 13 Respondent. CERTIFICATE OF APPEALABILITY

16 INTRODUCTION

17 Petitioner Alvin Smart, a prisoner of the State of California 18 who is currently incarcerated at Sierra Conservation Center in 19 Jamestown, California, seeks a writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 28 20 U.S.C. § 2254. Petitioner filed his Petition on July 10, 2009. On 21 February 24, 2010, the Court issued an Order to Show Cause why the 22 writ should not be granted and on July 23, 2010, Respondent filed an 23 Answer. Petitioner filed a Traverse on November 10, 2010.

24 For the following reasons, and having considered all of the 25 papers filed by the parties, the Court DENIES the Petition.

26 PROCEDURAL HISTORY

27 Petitioner was convicted of three counts of indecent exposure 28 with a prior conviction for the same offense. The state court

1 procedural history, which is relevant to Petitioner's habeas 2 petition, was summarized by the state court as follows.

3 On April 21, 1998, an information was filed charging 4 Smart with three counts of indecent exposure and one count 5 of falsely identifying himself to authorities. Smart was also charged with three prior strikes (§ 1170.12) and two prior prison term enhancements (§ 667.5, subd. (b)).

6 On January 25, 1999, the superior court suspended 7 proceedings pursuant to section 1367. A competency 8 examination was conducted and, on August 24, 1999, the court made a finding that Smart was not competent to stand trial. Smart was committed to the State Department of Mental Health for placement at Atascadero State Hospital 9 on September 15, 1999.

10 An order filed March 21, 2001, directed that Smart be 11 returned to court from the State Hospital. Certification 12 proceedings commenced on March 27, 2001, and, on April 12, 2001, Smart entered a plea of not guilty by reason of 13 insanity. A competency trial was held on September 6, 2001, at the conclusion of which the court found that Smart was competent to stand trial and ordered that 14 criminal proceedings were reinstated.

15 On February 4, 2002, the date set for commencement of 16 a jury trial, criminal proceedings were suspended again pursuant to section 1367. On February 26, 2002, the court 17 conducted another competency examination at the conclusion of which it found that Smart was not presently competent to stand trial. On April 4, 2002, Smart was committed to 18 the Department of Mental Health for placement at Napa State Hospital.

19 On April 11, 2003, Smart was returned to court for 20 proceedings to certify that he was competent to stand trial. Another competency examination was conducted on 21 June 10, 2003, at the conclusion of which the court made a determination that Smart was presently competent to stand trial.

22 In July and August of 2003, Smart filed a series of 23 pro per motions pursuant to which he complained about such 24 matters as ineffective assistance of counsel, being forced to take "drugs," and having to remain in the same unit of 25 the State Hospital where the doctors found he was competent. During this period Smart also made pro per 26 requests for a new competency hearing, substitute appointed counsel and a new preliminary hearing. On 27 September 5, 2003, Smart filed a pro per petition for a writ of habeas corpus seeking dismissal of charges and the institution of civil commitment proceedings on the ground that the period during which he had been detained as incompetent exceeded the maximum term or commitment authorized by section 1370, subdivision (c)(1) (section 1370(c)(1)). That petition was denied on September 16, 2003.

Trial commenced before the Honorable Stephen Hall on October 20, 2003. Smart's defense of not guilty by reason of insanity was bifurcated and the presentation of evidence in the guilt phase commenced on October 24, 2003. The jury began deliberating on October 28, and returned a verdict of guilty as to all charges that same day. The jury returned "true" verdicts as to the prior convictions of November 4 of that year. The jury was dismissed and the sanity phase of the trial was continued after the court decided that neither side was prepared to proceed.

The sanity phase of the trial was continued several times for reasons which did not relate to Smart's competency. On April 22, 2005, Smart filed a motion for substitute appointed counsel pursuant to People v. Marsden (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 118 (Marsden) and on April 26, he filed a motion to represent himself pursuant to Faretta v. California (1975) 422 U.S. 806 (Faretta). Both motions were heard and denied on May 4, 2005, by the Honorable John L. Grandsaert.

The sanity phase of the trial commenced before Judge Hall on January 17, 2006. That day, Smart made a motion for a hearing to determine whether he was competent to proceed with the trial, which was denied. The presentation of evidence began on January 23, 2006. On January 26, 2006, after deliberating for less than one and one-half hours, the jury returned its verdict that Smart was sane when he committed the offenses. On February 24, 2006, the court denied Smart's new trial motion, refused to dismiss his prior strikes and sentenced him to a total term of 75 years to life in prison.

People v. Smart, pp. 2-4, Nos. A113111, A119279, Court of Appeal of the State of California, First Appellate District, (filed by Respondent as Ex. B-3 and hereinafter, Opinion).

Petitioner appealed, and on February 15, 2008, the California Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment in an unpublished order and denied Petitioner a writ of habeas corpus. The California Supreme 1 Court denied review of Petitioner's direct and collateral appeals.

2 STATEMENT OF FACTS

3 The California Court of Appeal summarized the factual 4 background of this case as follows:

5 A. Guilt Evidence

6 1. The Charged Offenses

7 On December 17, 1996, at approximately 6:15 a.m., Nancy 8 Pangilinan went to the underground garage of her Millbrae 9 condominium complex. She was unlocking her car when 10 she heard a noise in the empty stall next to her parking 11 space. Pangilinan looked over and saw a nude man 12 masturbating. The man was approximately two feet from her car. His face was covered by a red scarf and he was "crouching down like a catcher." The man's genitals were "completely shaven," and he was "stroking" his penis which was "shiny, like he was lubricated."

13 Pangilinan was frightened by the man and tried to get 14 in her car and drive away but she was so nervous that the 15 car "jumped" as she put it into gear. The man walked in 16 front of the car and approached her driver's side window while he continued to masturbate. Pangilinan almost hit the man as she drove away.

17 On October 12, 1997, at around 2:00 a.m., Katrina 18 Stanley was in her ground floor Burlingame apartment reading a magazine and waiting for her husband to come home. She noticed a man outside standing about a foot away 19 from her window. She went to the window and saw that the man's pants were down around his ankles and that something 20 like a shirt was covering the top of his head. The man's crotch area was completely shaved and his hand was on his shiny, fully erect penis which appeared to have some "sort 21 of lubricant on it." He was masturbating with one hand as he motioned with the other for Stanley to come outside.
22 The man stayed outside while Stanley called 911 but fled once she hung up the phone.

23 On the morning of October 12, 1997, Nancy Pangilinan, 24 the woman who had found a man masturbating in her garage the previous December, was preparing to take a vacation.
25 Nancy and her husband Joel went to their garage at around 26 7:30 a.m. because Nancy wanted to make sure the car was properly parked while they were away.

1           Nancy was re-parking the car when she heard Joel shout, 2 "what the hell are you doing here?" Through her side 3 mirror, Nancy saw the same man who had accosted her in 4 December of 1996. He was nude, crouched down and his face 5 was covered with a red scarf. The man apologized and said 6 he was "going to the bathroom." Nancy said:
 7 "I have seen you before, you were behind my other car in 8 this garage." The man repeatedly said, "I am sorry, leave 9 me alone, I will get out of here, I am going to the 10 bathroom, leave me alone."

1           Although he claimed to be going to the bathroom, Nancy 2 did not observe the man relieving himself. Nor did she 3 observe any urine or feces in the spot where he had been 4 crouching after he walked away. As he walked away from 5 Nancy, the man kept his face covered with the red shirt 6 but did not attempt to cover his genitals which were 7 completely shaven. The man's penis, though not erect, was 8 shiny and appeared to have been lubricated.

11           Nancy's husband Joel followed the man as he retrieved 12 his clothes from behind a car parked several stalls away 13 from where Joel and Nancy had first seen him. The man, who 14 had put his pants on and no longer covered his face, 15 turned toward Joel who got a "good look at him." Joel 16 followed the man out of the garage where he encountered Jesse Capilitan who was walking his dog. Joel asked Capilitan to call the police. Joel lost sight of the man but Capilitan got in his car and followed the man while he called the police on his cell phone. The man darted behind a condominium complex into a large grassy field.

17           2. Police Investigation

18           When the police arrived at the Pangilinan's residence, 19 Jesse Capilitan directed them toward the field where an 20 officer found appellant, Alvin Smart. Smart was "lying 21 underneath a large amount of brush and leaves holding 22 still as if trying to avoid" detection. Smart's hands were 23 "greasy" and "shiny" looking. He falsely reported that his 24 name was Robert Thomas Payne. From close by, officers 25 retrieved a jar of Vaseline and a red T-shirt. FN2.

26           Katrina Stanley was brought to the scene and identified 27 Smart as the man who was outside her window the previous evening. She recognized his shoes, pants and the T-shirt he was wearing. At trial, Stanley testified that she may also have recognized a tattoo on his arm.

28           After his arrest, Smart was taken to the Burlingame 29 police station where he was interviewed by Officer James 30 Hutchings. Hutchings told Smart that a woman had reported

1 seeking a man the previous evening, standing outside her 2 window and masturbating. Smart acknowledged he knew what 3 masturbating was, but denied any knowledge about the 4 incident and said that he could not "even get an erection 5 anyway" because of prostate problems. Smart also said the 6 woman could not accuse him of anything because he "never 7 did nothing like that." Hutchings told Smart that another 8 woman saw a man pull his pants down outside her apartment 9 which was close by the place where Smart was arrested.
 Smart stated that the only time his pants were down was when he was "taking a crap" in the field where police found him. Smart repeatedly stated that he did not pull his pants down in front of women and that he made sure he was hidden from view when he went to the bathroom. Smart also told the officer that he had never been arrested before.

10 A short time after Hutchings completed his interview, 11 Millbrae police officer Richard Dixon interviewed Smart.
 12 Dixon asked whether Smart had exposed himself to a female.
 13 Smart again denied that he had done anything. Smart also 14 denied ownership of the jar of Vaseline and the red 15 T-Shirt. He denied that the greasy substance on his hands was Vaseline and said he just had oily skin. Smart told the officer that his genitals were shaved because he had "crabs." Smart also said he had "absolutely not" been incarcerated in the past, that he had not been running from anybody and that he was sleeping in the woods and was just "a victim of circumstances."

16       3. Uncharged Incident

17       Late on the evening of November 8, 1983, Trudie 18 Mitchang heard a knock and went to the front door of her 19 ground floor apartment in Pacifica. Seeing nothing through 20 the peephole, Mitchang started to return to her bedroom 21 when she heard another knock and realized it was coming 22 from the kitchen window. She saw a man outside the window who was wearing something over his face that resembled a ski mask, with holes for the eyes cut out. The man's pants were unzipped and he was stroking his exposed penis which was "slick, shiny or oily looking." Mitchang screamed to her roommate and called 911.

23       A San Mateo police officer who responded to Mitchang's 24 call apprehended Smart who was found sitting on a 25 motorcycle, with his pants falling down and his buttocks 26 exposed. A T-shirt with eye holes cut into it was in Smart's pocket. Smart also had a jar of Vaseline in his pants pocket. There was Vaseline on his hands and the crotch area of his pants.

1           An officer walked Mitchang to the location where Smart 2 was apprehended, only a short distance from her home.
3 Mitchang identified Smart as her assailant, although she 4 could not be absolutely sure because his face had been 5 covered. Mitchang said that the clothes Smart was wearing 6 and his general appearance "matched exactly."

7           B. Sanity Evidence

8           1. The Defense Case

9           To support his claim that he was insane when the 10 charged offenses were committed, Smart presented testimony 11 by two expert witnesses, Dr. Robert Slater and Dr. Paul 12 Berg.

13           a. Dr. Robert Slater

14           Dr. Slater is a board certified psychiatrist who 15 testified on behalf of the defense as an expert in the 16 field of psychiatry. Slater interviewed Smart three times 17 between April 2001 and November 2003, the first two times 18 pursuant to court orders.

19           Slater interviewed Smart on April 30, 2001, as part of 20 a court ordered psychiatric evaluation to determine if 21 Smart should be found not guilty by reason of insanity. At 22 the time, Smart was disheveled, poorly groomed, and he 23 rocked back and forth, muttered, giggled and was generally 24 incoherent throughout the evaluation. In a May 3, 2001, 25 report to the court, Slater diagnosed Smart as suffering 26 from chronic schizophrenia. Slater based his diagnosis on 27 Smart's medical records which reflected he had been diagnosed as schizophrenic in the past and on Smart's "presentation." However, Slater also determined that Smart was sane when the offenses were committed. Although Smart was too incoherent in April 2001 to respond to questions about the incidents, the police reports from that time period indicated that Smart was sane when the crimes were committed, that he knew what he had done and that what he had done was wrong.

28           Slater interviewed Smart again on February 15, 2002, 29 pursuant to a court order for a determination whether 30 Smart was competent to stand trial. Smart was responsive, 31 more alert and made good eye contact, but he was not 32 coherent and engaged in "almost non-stop psychotic 33 ramblings." When Slater interviewed Smart in 2002, he was 34 aware that Smart had previously been identified as a 35 malingeringer. However, Slater concluded that "[t]he content 36 of his psychotic rambling was very consistent with a 37 genuinely mentally ill person, rather than a sane person

1 trying to fake insanity." Therefore, Slater concluded that 2 Smart was not competent to stand trial in February 2002.

3 Slater interviewed Smart a third time on November 12, 4 2003, in order to reconsider his prior conclusion that 5 Smart was sane at the time the offenses were committed.
 6 Smart's psychological condition was "markedly improved."
 7 He was coherent, responsive, and alert, made eye contact 8 and was able to articulate the charges against him. Smart 9 reported that he was "pretty much out of it" when he was 10 arrested, that God was telling him what to do and he had 11 to obey because he was God's son Jesus, and that 12 Government people were trying to kill him. Smart said that 13 he could see the agents inside his body when he looked in 14 the mirror and that God told him the only way to get rid 15 of them was to masturbate in front of women to kill the 16 agents. Smart told Slater that he strongly believed what 17 the voices told him at the time, that he still gets 18 confused at times, that he can think more clearly now but 19 "it still seems real."

20 Slater testified at trial that he did not believe Smart 21 was malingering during the November 2003 interview. In 22 Slater's opinion, a successful malingerer would appear to 23 be "incoherent all the time," in order to secure a finding 24 of incompetence and avoid trial altogether. Furthermore, 25 Slater characterized Smart's reported delusion as a "story 26 told by a crazy person" and stated that "I don't think 27 there is any sane person that could think this up that 28 quickly off the top of his head, even with a rehearsal, it is too real." Slater testified that Smart "comes across as a generally psychotic person, even when he is coherent, he is still psychotic."

29 When asked for his conclusion as to whether Smart was 30 sane at the time the offenses were committed, Slater 31 testified that "I concluded he was legally insane, on the 32 basis of the history that he gave to me."

33 b. Dr. Paul Berg

34 Dr. Paul Berg is a psychologist, licensed in California 35 since 1967, who testified as an expert in the field of 36 psychology. Berg was retained by the defense to review 37 Smart's medical records and evaluate him in order to 38 determine whether he was sane at the time the offenses 39 were committed. Berg interviewed Smart on July 22, 2004, 40 and also administered a Mellon Clinical Multi-Axial 41 Inventory (MCMI) test, the purpose of which was to obtain 42 a long-term perspective on the patient's mental health 43 status.

1           During the interview, Smart explained to Berg that 2 exposing himself to women was "the only way he could free 3 himself from the government agents that had entered his 4 body." By masturbating in front of women, Smart was able 5 to release "the holy liquid" and "cleanse him[self] and 6 rid him[self] of this poisonous presence in his body." Berg's 7 clinical impression of Smart was that he suffered 8 from a delusional disorder and that he was a 9 schizophrenic.

10           Berg offered the opinion at trial that Smart was 11 psychotic when Berg interviewed him and was legally insane 12 when the offenses were committed. Berg acknowledged that, 13 in the past, Smart had been variously diagnosed as a 14 schizophrenic and as a malingeringer. In Berg's opinion, 15 these two diagnoses were not inconsistent. Furthermore, 16 Berg believed that the results of the MCMI test 17 reinforced his impression that Smart "was not trying to 18 fake" mental illness.

19           2. The Prosecution Case

20           a. Lay witnesses

21           The People presented testimony from several witnesses 22 who observed Smart's behavior and demeanor during relevant 23 time periods including Mark Stockton, Smart's former 24 parole agent. Stockton testified he saw Smart at least 25 four times a month from December 1995 until his October 26 1997 arrest, except for periods when Smart was 27 incarcerated for parole violations. Smart never exhibited 1 any delusional thinking during parole visits. He acted 2 "appropriate[ly]," and he knew "what was going on."

3           Police officers Hutchings and Dixon both testified 4 regarding Smart's behavior on the day of his arrest.
 5 Hutchings testified that Smart was cooperative, acted 6 appropriately and did not do anything to suggest he was 7 delusional or crazy. Officer Dixon testified that Smart 8 did not express any delusions or make any bizarre 9 statements to him. Throughout the arrest and interview 10 process, Dixon did not see any sign that Smart was having 11 any mental problems. FN3.

12           Ruthann Flament, a nurse practitioner at the Maguire 13 Correctional Facility at the San Mateo County jail, had 14 observed Smart on several occasions while he was in jail 15 and was also familiar with his medical records at the 16 jail. Flament first examined Smart on October 12, 1997, 17 the day he was arrested, after he reported to authorities 18 that he suffers from asthma. During the examination, Smart 19 complained of lower back pain due to a car accident. He did not make any mental health complaints, and did not engage in any bizarre behavior. Flamant saw Smart again on October 24, 1997, to follow up regarding Smart's back pain. Smart was in no acute distress, was pleasant, and talkative and was advised to exercise. Between October 1997 and September 1999, Smart sought medical attention close to fifty times but never for a mental health issue. Flamant testified that Smart first came to the attention of mental health staff in February 1999 when a deputy observed Smart engaging in bizarre behavior and requested a mental health evaluation for him.

Stephanie Arthur, the prosecutor at Smart's October 2003 guilt trial, testified that she took careful notes about what occurred in court during each day of trial. On the afternoon of the first day, Smart appeared wearing a green smock-type robe and sitting in a wheelchair. He was "mumbling incoherently and blowing raspberries ... throughout the proceedings." The next morning, Smart again appeared in the robe and wheelchair but was now talking loudly and claimed to be Jesus Christ. He called his attorney derogatory names but was not mumbling and rocking in his chair as he had done the day before. At some point during the morning session, the trial judge informed Smart that the trial would proceed with or without his cooperation. That afternoon, Smart returned to court dressed in street clothes. He stopped the yelling, the rocking and the mumbling. Smart wore a suit to court the next day, the first day of jury selection. During the remainder of the guilt trial, Smart appeared to be communicating well with counsel and was respectful of the proceedings.

b. Dr. Michael Venard

Dr. Michael Venard, a staff psychologist at Napa State Hospital, was subpoenaed by the prosecution to testify regarding an evaluation of Smart that he conducted in March 2001. Venard was not paid for his testimony and was not asked to formulate an opinion regarding Smart's sanity.

Venard testified that, in March 2001, hospital staff at Smart's housing unit determined that Smart "presented" differently depending on who he was talking to and requested an assessment of the authenticity of Smart's mental health symptoms to aid them in formulating an appropriate treatment plan. Venard reviewed legal and medical records dating back to 1971, observed Smart informally on several occasions and conducted an interview with him in March 2001.

1           From his review of Smart's records, Venard learned that 2 Smart had employed several aliases over the years. This 3 fact was significant because it indicated Smart was a 4 sophisticated patient who knew how to protect his identity 5 and present a different identity to medical evaluators.
 6 The records also revealed that mental health treatment was 7 never voluntary but always followed some type of legal 8 problem when he was put in jail. Smart's records also 9 suggested that he knew how to control his symptoms so that 10 he could have himself moved from a jail setting to a 11 treatment setting. Whenever Smart was placed in a jail 12 setting, he would "almost immediately begin to 13 decompensate" and would have to be returned to a hospital 14 setting.

1           In March 2001, Venard visited the unit where Smart was 2 housed several times a week and had the opportunity to 3 informally observe Smart in that environment. Venard 4 observed that Smart was no more or less impaired than 5 other patients who managed their daily affairs, got to 6 their appointments and ran their lives. When Venard told 7 Smart he was a psychologist who was asked to perform an 8 evaluation, Smart's behavior changed. At first Smart made 9 eye contact and spoke clearly. But, as Venard began to 10 question him about his mental health, Smart became less 11 responsive, and more isolated. After the interview was 12 completed, Smart's behavior changed again as he began to 13 interact with patients and staff in a more normal way.

1           During the March 2001 interview, Venard asked Smart 2 about the charged offenses. Smart claimed to have no 3 memory of them. When Venard asked what other people had 4 told him about the events, Smart became upset and claimed 5 he never wanted to hurt anybody and was not a violent man.
 6 He engaged in an "ongoing upset kind of rambling," during 7 which he made the following statement: "It's not fair to 8 lock me up for three years for something that I don't 9 remember. Two doctors already told me I was incompetent, 10 and I should not go to jail." During the interview, Smart 11 never told Venard that he had delusions that required him 12 to masturbate in front of women.

1           Venard attempted to administer two tests, one designed 2 to help clinicians determine whether a patient is 3 exaggerating, manipulating or making up psychiatric 4 symptoms, and the other used to determine whether a 5 patient is engaging in memory malingering, i.e., whether 6 he is "faking" memory problems. Smart refused to complete 7 both of these tests.
 8

1           Venard drew several conclusions from his evaluation
 2 which he shared at trial. Among other things, Venard found

1 that Smart's overall presentation indicated an 2 "intentional exaggeration of his symptoms whenever he's 3 faced with legal consequences for his actions," that he 4 appeared to be self-sufficient on a daily 5 basis, and that he was capable of recalling names and 6 events when he needed that information to support his 7 claim of impairment. Venard also found that Smart did have 8 a "true mental illness," but that it was coupled with exaggeration or even intentional manufacturing of problems when he was faced with a legal problem. Venard also testified that "[Smart] seemed fully aware of his own history. He seem[ed] aware of the potential consequences of his actions; and, in my opinion, his lack of cooperation with attorneys or mental health professionals was voluntary and goal directed."

9 Venard concluded that Smart engages in "partial 10 malingering." Malingering describes a person "who is 11 intentionally producing symptoms in order to get out of 12 something." Partial malingering, by contrast, is when the 13 individual exaggerates very real symptoms, but can control 14 those symptoms and "learn[s] how to use them to [his or 15 her] own best benefit." In Venard's opinion, Smart is 16 "intentionally in control of his mental health symptoms 17 and [is] able to use those symptoms in order to obtain a 18 goal of getting out of jail and moving into a much more 19 comfortable situation," like the state hospital system.
 20 FN4.

21 c. Dr. Joel Leifer

22 Dr. Joel Leifer is a forensic psychologist employed by 23 the State of California to perform psychological 24 evaluations, competency assessments and sanity evaluations 25 on behalf of various counties. Leifer evaluated Smart on 26 three occasions during the course of the lower court 27 proceedings. He was called by the prosecution to testify as an expert in the field of psychology.

28 On May 2, 2001, Leifer interviewed Smart at the San Mateo County jail in order to determine if he was sane or insane at the time the offenses were committed. In a May 15, 2001 report, Leifer concluded that Smart was sane when the offenses were committed. During the interview Smart "appeared profoundly psychiatrically compromised. He was mute. He was nonresponsive, and he rocked incessantly in his chair." However, Smart's presentation at the time of the interview did not answer the legal question whether Smart was sane in October 1997. Leifer concluded that the audio tape of Smart's police interview after his October 1997 arrest indicated that Smart understood the wrongfulness of his conduct because he denied committing

1 the exposures and stated that "he wouldn't do something 2 like that because something like that was wrong."

3 Leifer interviewed Smart again on February 14, 2002, to 4 determine whether Smart was competent to stand trial and 5 concluded that Smart was "trial incompetent." Leifer's 6 conclusion was based primarily on Smart's catatonic 7 demeanor during his interview. Although there were 8 questions of malingering, Leifer testified that he could 9 not "disregard [Smart's] very convincing presentation at 10 that time."

11 In November 2003, Leifer conducted another competency 12 evaluation. In a report dated November 18, 2003, Leifer 13 concluded that Smart was competent to stand trial. Leifer 14 also opined that Smart was presently sane and noted that 15 Smart had been "able to discuss his case coherently and 16 consistently and with relevance." However, Leifer also 17 found that Smart was insane at the time the offenses were 18 committed. During the November 2003 interview, Smart 19 provided a "very clear, coherent, rational explanation of 20 what was going on in his mind at the time of the offense." 21 Smart told Leifer that "his actions were commands from 22 God, and that he was his son Jesus." God ordered him to 23 masturbate in front of women and he had to obey God's 24 orders. The clarity and forcefulness with which Smart 25 expressed his delusions led Leifer to change his opinion 26 about Smart's sanity and to conclude that Smart was not 27 sane when the offenses were committed.

28 In 2004, Leifer changed his opinion again and concluded
 1 that Smart was sane at the time of the offenses. Leifer 2 testified at trial that, when he interviewed Smart in 3 November 2003, he had some concern about malingering but 4 ultimately concluded that Smart was a schizophrenic person 5 who also exaggerated his symptoms. However, during the 6 months following that interview, Leifer reviewed, for the 7 first time, Smart's extensive treatment records. Leifer 8 was persuaded by those records and the events documented 9 therein that Smart was a malingeringer. Those records showed 10 that Smart had turned his symptoms on and off depending on 11 his goals and the people around him. Leifer also noted 12 that Smart was "overheard educating other inmates on how 13 to malinger symptoms so that they can be found to 14 be trial incompetent." Leifer ultimately concluded that 15 the "very sophisticated techniques" that Smart had 16 employed over the years were not consistent with a 17 diagnosis of schizophrenia.

18 d. Dr. Ronald Roberts

19 Dr. Ronald Roberts is a psychologist, licensed since

1 1984, who testified on behalf of the prosecution as an 2 expert in the field of psychology.

3 Roberts interviewed Smart on January 14, 2004. During 4 the interview, Smart was "very focused, somewhat upbeat in 5 his demeanor," reported that he was being treated poorly 6 by the jail and tried to get Roberts to feel sorry for 7 him. Early in the interview, Smart volunteered that he 8 currently knew that indecent exposure was a crime but 9 claimed that, at the time of the offenses, he did not know 10 his conduct was unlawful because he "was being directed by 11 mental delusions."

12 It appeared to Roberts that Smart had a story he was 13 ready to tell at the January 2004 interview. Smart's "very 14 elaborate story" was about how he was raped at knife point 15 when he was a child by a federal officer and, since that 16 time, federal agents had been after him and had entered 17 his body. Smart reported that God told him Federal agents 18 were trying to kill him and the only way to protect 19 himself was to kill them by masturbating. Roberts 20 testified that Smart also explained that he "was 21 delusional regarding the need to masturbate in front of 22 women for the first two incidents, but not at the time of 23 the third incident" when he "was just looking for a place 24 to go to the bathroom." Roberts testified that Smart 25 appeared to appreciate that his conduct was wrong because 26 he essentially used the delusions as an excuse for 27 behavior that would otherwise be against the law and deserving of punishment.

28 Roberts identified several factors which were 1 inconsistent with the conclusion that Smart suffers from 2 schizophrenia. For example, Smart's purported delusions 3 were very concise and clearly explained whereas 4 schizophrenics think in a "very jumbled" and "scattered"
 5 manner. Also, Smart claimed to have clear visual delusions 6 which would be rare for a schizophrenic to experience. In 7 addition, Smart had been involved in a long-term romantic 8 relationship and Roberts had never known anyone with 9 paranoid schizophrenia to have had that kind of long term 10 romantic relationship.

11 Roberts acknowledged that "sometimes individuals who 12 may be actively psychotic may get put on medications and 13 have the active signs of psychosis subside," but found 14 that this possibility did not apply to Smart. Smart's 15 medical records showed that he was not taking any 16 psychiatric medication during the initial phase of his 17 incarceration after his arrest for the charged offenses, 18 and yet he did not report any psychiatric symptoms.
 19 Indeed, Smart did not even make the claim that he was

1 psychotic at the time of the charged offenses until 1999.
 2 Roberts testified that these circumstances were not 3 consistent with a diagnosis of schizophrenia.
 4 Schizophrenics who are not on medication cannot control
 5 their symptoms and Smart's alleged psychotic symptoms 6 could not have gone unnoticed for the lengthy period of 7 time during which he was incarcerated but not taking any 8 medication.

9       Roberts administered two psychological tests during his 10 interview with Smart, a Structured Interview of Reported 11 Symptoms (SIRS), which is designed to help identify 12 patients who are faking schizophrenic types of disorders 13 and a Rorschach test which is used to identify 14 schizophrenic or psychotic disorders in general. Smart's 15 responses to the Rorschach test "gave no indication of 16 schizophrenia or any type of psychotic disorder." The 17 results of the SIRS established a "concern about the 18 possibility of malingering," although Roberts could not 19 conclude that there was malingering based upon that one 20 test.

21       Roberts found additional evidence of malingering in 22 Smart's records. Police reports from the time when the 23 crimes were committed did not contain any report of "any 24 type of psychotic symptom whatsoever," or any sign that 25 Smart was suffering from a mental illness. Medical and 26 hospital records showed that Smart came to the attention 27 of mental health professionals only after he was charged 28 with a crime. Roberts also noted that the records showed 29 that Smart's symptoms of schizophrenia surfaced whenever 30 it was time for Smart to appear in court. Roberts also 31 found "multiple, multiple notations in the records about 32 malingering."

33       Ultimately, Roberts concluded: "From my perspective in 34 being a psychologist with over 30 years of experience in 35 evaluating individuals that have psychotic problems, I saw 36 absolutely no evidence at any time at the commission of 37 these crimes of any type of significant defect in his 38 mental state that might warrant considering insanity." 39 Roberts also stated that all of the information he 40 considered suggested that Smart "knew the difference 41 between right and wrong and knew that the acts that were 42 being committed were wrong."

43 FN2. Stains on the shirt tested positive for semen.
 44 However, the sample was degraded and could not be matched 45 to Smart's DNA.

46 FN3. The prosecution called several other witnesses who 47 had previously testified at Smart's guilt trial.

1 FN4. Venard found many examples of this behavior
 2 documented in Smart's medical history. Another example
 3 occurred during Venard's interview when Smart admitted 4 that he had "decided not to eat or sleep so he would get out of jail."

6 LEGAL STANDARD

7 The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996
 8 ("AEDPA"), codified under 28 U.S.C. § 2254, provides "the exclusive 9 vehicle for a habeas petition by a state prisoner in custody 10 pursuant to a state court judgment, even when the petitioner is not 11 challenging his underlying state court conviction." White v.
Lambert, 370 F.3d 1002, 1009-10 (9th Cir. 2004). Under AEDPA, this 12 Court may entertain a petition for habeas relief on behalf of a 13 California state inmate "only on the ground that he is in custody in 14 violation of the Constitution or laws or treaties of the United 15 States." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(a).

16 The writ may not be granted unless the state court's 17 adjudication of any claim on the merits: "(1) resulted in a 18 decision that was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable 19 application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by 20 the Supreme Court of the United States; or (2) resulted in a 21 decision that was based on an unreasonable determination of the 22 facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court 23 proceeding." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d). Under this deferential standard, 24 "a federal habeas court may not issue a writ simply because that 25 court concludes in its independent judgment that the relevant 26 state-court decision applied clearly established federal law 27

1 erroneously or incorrectly. Rather, that application must also be 2 unreasonable." Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 411 (2000). In 3 Harrington v. Richter, the Court further stresses that "'an 4 unreasonable application of federal law is different from an 5 incorrect application of federal law.'" 131 S. Ct. 770, 785 (2011) 6 (citing Williams, 529 U.S. at 410) (emphasis in original). "A state 7 court's determination that a claim lacks merit precludes federal 8 habeas relief so long as 'fairminded jurists could disagree' on the 9 correctness of the state court's decision." Id. at 786 (citing 10 Yarborough v. Alvarado, 541 U.S. 653, 664 (2004)).

11 While circuit law may provide persuasive authority in 12 determining whether the state court made an unreasonable application 13 of Supreme Court precedent, the only definitive source of clearly 14 established federal law under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d) rests in the 15 holdings (as opposed to the dicta) of the Supreme Court as of the 16 time of the state court decision. Williams, 529 U.S. at 412; Clark 17 v. Murphy, 331 F.3d 1062, 1069 (9th Cir. 2003).

18 The state court decision to which 28 U.S.C. § 2254 applies is 19 the "last reasoned decision" of the state court. See Ylst v.
 20 Nunnemaker, 501 U.S. 797, 803-804 (1991); Barker v. Fleming, 423 21 F.3d 1085, 1091-1092 (9th Cir. 2005). Although Ylst primarily 22 involved the issue of procedural default, the "look through" rule 23 announced there has been extended beyond that particular context.
 24 Barker, 423 F.3d at 1092 n.3 (citing Lambert v. Blodgett, 393 F.3d 25 943, 970 n.17 (9th Cir. 2004) and Bailey v. Rae, 339 F.3d 1107, 26 1112-1113 (9th Cir. 2003)).

Even if a petitioner meets the requirements of § 2254(d), habeas relief is warranted only if the constitutional error at issue had a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict. Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 638 (1993). Under this standard, petitioners "may obtain plenary review of their constitutional claims, but they are not entitled to habeas relief based on trial error unless they can establish that it resulted in 'actual prejudice.'" Brecht, 507 U.S. at 637, citing United States v. Lane, 474 U.S. 438, 439 (1986).

DISCUSSION

11 Petitioner raises seven claims in his Petition. All claims are 12 discussed below.

13 || I. Petitioner's Faretta Request

14 Petitioner contends that his constitutional rights were 15 violated when the state court denied his request to represent 16 himself pursuant to Farella v. California, 422 U.S. 806 (1975).
17 The state court considered this issue in a lengthy, reasoned opinion 18 on direct appeal.

19       First, the state court reviewed the circumstances surrounding 20 Petitioner's motion to represent himself at the sanity phase of his 21 trial

22 || 1 Background

23 As noted above, Smart's April 22 Marsden and April 26
24 Faretta motions were both heard and denied by Judge 25 Grandsaert on May 4, 2005. FN5. At that time, the sanity phase of Smart's trial was scheduled to commence on May 23, 2005, and the prosecution opposed any further continuances.

The Marsden motion was directed at Steven Chase.

1 Smart's fourth attorney during the lower court
 2 proceedings, who had represented Smart during the guilt
 3 phase of the trial. The transcript of the hearing reflects 4 that Smart had made four prior Marsden motions all of 5 which had been denied. Smart made several complaints about 6 his defense counsel, including that Chase (1) accused him 7 of faking his mental illness, (2) did not attempt to stop 8 the guilt trial on the ground that Smart was incompetent; 9 (3) did not present a defense at the guilt phase; (4) was 10 not adequately prepared for the sanity phase; (5) intended 11 to call only two doctors at the sanity phase; and (5) had 12 failed to obtain relevant medical records and 13 documentation. The trial court denied the Marsden motion, 14 stating that defense counsel was a "very experienced, 15 excellent defense attorney" who was as "good an 16 advocate as any lawyer can be."

17 After the Marsden motion was denied, the court 18 entertained Smart's Faretta motion. The court asked Smart 19 several questions. It inquired why Smart had filed so many 20 Marsden motions to which Smart replied he had been 21 receiving "ineffective assistance of counsel." The court 22 asked whether Smart remembered what happened during the 23 guilt phase. Smart responded: "Vaguely, yes I do. And it 24 had to do with the fact -- I told you in the Marsden 25 hearing about what -- the doctor had found me to be 26 incompetent before I went to trial." FN6. The court asked 27 whether Smart was still having delusions. Smart responded 28 that he was "competent," and that it had been "quite 29 awhile" since he had heard voices. He explained that, over 30 the years, he had experienced "mental illnesses" at 31 various times, that he knows "when it's coming on," and 32 that at the present time, he was "very competent," and was 33 "not having any problems." Smart reiterated that he was 34 not competent at the guilt phase because that is what the 35 psychiatrist said. He stated that he goes through a 36 "process of hearing voices, being delusional," and that 37 when that happened it could get so bad that he did not 38 "know nothing at all."

39 When the court asked Smart whether he would be ready to 40 proceed with the trial on the scheduled date, Smart 41 replied: "I think I'm ready to proceed on that date. If 42 not, if I have to look over all the records, I want to get 43 a trial as soon as possible, Your Honor, like I said. A 44 couple weeks longer, maybe, or something, at the most. I 45 want to go to court in trial as soon as possible. I'm 46 not trying to put a trial off, Your Honor. I'm trying to 47 go to trial and trying to win it."

48 The court prefaced its ruling by expressing its opinion 49 that Smart was articulate and intelligent, mentally ill

1 but competent to stand trial. The court then shared 2 several concerns including that (1) the case was seven 3 years old, (2) Smart's delusions and resulting problems 4 with historical reality did not render him incompetent but 5 would affect his ability to represent himself, (3) Smart's 6 request was being made mid-trial, after the guilt phase 7 was already completed, (4) it appeared that Smart's real 8 motivation was to get rid of his current counsel and 9 further delay the proceedings, (5) Smart had already made 10 so many Marsden motions, and (6) Smart had been disruptive 11 during the guilt phase of the trial.

12 With respect to its concern about Smart's prior 13 disruptive behavior, the court gave two examples. It 14 mentioned Smart's behavior during the first few days of 15 the guilt phase when Smart attempted to convince the trial 16 court he was not competent. The court also referred to an 17 incident during the defense closing argument. Smart 18 opened his shirt to show the jury that he did not have a 19 mole or birthmark on his chest after reference was made to 20 the fact that Katrina Stanley had reported to police that 21 she thought she saw a mark on the chest of the man who 22 exposed himself to her.

23 Ultimately, the court denied the Farella motion on the 24 following grounds: "In light of the fact that this case 25 has been going on for several years. In light of the fact 26 that you acted in a way that disrupted court proceedings 27 at the first phase of this trial, in terms of what you did 28 during closing argument. In light of the fact that you refused to come to court and attempted to disrupt proceedings there. In light of the fact that I don't believe that you would be ready to proceed to trial on May 23rd if I were to grant your motion, because of the kinds of things you said to counsel this morning, about how there's so little time left, and there's not much time left for Mr. Chase to complete the work that needs to be done in your opinion. I'm concerned when you say that you're not going to ask for a continuance, that it's either unrealistic or untrue with what you intend to do.
 [¶] I don't see how you can say to Mr. Chase that he's not going to be able to be ready for trial on May 23rd, and yet say that you would be ready for trial on May 23rd. {¶} I think, in light of that history, in light of the present setting of the case, in light of the People's right to proceed to trial after seven years, in light of your conduct in the first phase of this trial.... [¶] I don't believe that you truly do seek the right to represent yourself as opposed to desire to get rid of you're [sic] appointed counsel. I think that your request is being made here for purposes of getting rid of counsel and for the purpose of delaying proceedings. I think you would disrupt proceedings in the second phase of this trial, as you did

1 in the first phase."

2 FN5. Although the transcript of the Marsden hearing was 3 originally filed under seal, relevant portions of the transcript were unsealed pursuant to this court's order.

4 FN6. During the Marsden hearing, Smart maintained that, 5 before the guilt phase of the trial commenced, a doctor named Al Bruce found that he was not competent to stand 6 trial. However, Chase advised the court: "I know nothing about that doctor. And -- and like I say, I sat through 7 the trial with this man. I talked to him daily. He was not incompetent. That's just -- that's a fact."

8 Opinion at 17-20 (footnotes in original).

9 The state appellate court then engaged in a lengthy discussion 10 as to whether the trial court had abused its discretion in denying 11 Petitioner's Faretta motion. The appellate court held that the 12 trial court had been correct in concluding both that Petitioner's 13 Faretta motion had been untimely and that even if it had been 14 timely, it was made for the purposes of delay and thus was properly 15 denied. Opinion at 21-23.

16 As to timeliness, the state appellate court found that:

17 The objectively verifiable facts support the lower court's conclusion that the motion was made mid-trial. Trial 18 commenced on October 20, 2003, and the verdict that Smart was sane was returned on January 26, 2006. Only the guilt 19 phase of the trial had been completed when Smart made his Faretta motion on April 26, 2005.

20 Opinion at 21. The court also rejected as without merit 21 Petitioner's unsupported argument that his Faretta motion ought to 22 have been treated the same as a motion made before trial. Id.

23 The state appellate court also rejected Petitioner's argument 24 that his motivation for the motion was irrelevant. Opinion at 24.
25 Rather, "'in order to protect the fundamental constitutional right 26 of counsel, one of the trial court's tasks when confronted with a 27

1 motion for self-representation is to determine whether the defendant 2 truly desires to represent himself or herself." Id. (citing People 3 v. Marshall, 15 Cal. 4th 1, 23 (1997)). As a result:

4 Under the circumstances presented here, the lower 5 court could reasonably have concluded that Smart lacked 6 the desire and, indeed, the intention to actually 7 represent himself at trial and that he attempted to invoke 8 his Faretta right either (1) in haste and out of frustration because his Marsden motion was denied; or (2) pursuant to a plan to shed himself of counsel, delay the proceedings, and later claim that he needed a new attorney to assist him at the sanity phase of the trial.

9 . . .

10 To summarize, Smart did not have an unqualified 11 constitutional right to represent himself during the 12 second half of his trial and he has failed to show that the lower court abused its discretion by denying the mid-trial Faretta motion.

13 Opinion at 25.

14 Petitioner cannot demonstrate that the California Court of 15 Appeal's reasoned decision was contrary to, or involved an 16 unreasonable application of, clearly established United States
17 Supreme Court law. Nor can he demonstrate that the state court's 18 factual findings were unreasonable.

19 The United State Supreme Court has confirmed that a criminal 20 defendant has a Sixth Amendment right to self-representation.

21 Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 832 (1975). A defendant's 22 decision to represent himself and waive the right to counsel, 23 however, must be unequivocal, knowing and intelligent, timely, and 24 not for purposes of securing delay. Id. at 835; United States v.
25 Arlt, 41 F.3d 516, 519 (9th Cir. 1994); Adams v. Carroll, 875 F.2d 26 1441, 1444 & n.3 (9th Cir. 1989). Here, as the state court 27 reasonably concluded, Petitioner's motion to represent himself was 28

1 both untimely and made for the purposes of delay. Opinion at 17-26.
 2 Petitioner can cite no clearly established law indicating that the 3 state court decision was in error.

4 In addition, even if Petitioner had demonstrated a colorable 5 claim of error, he would not be able to show that any error had a 6 substantial or injurious effect on the verdict. Brecht, 507 U.S. at 7 638. There is no indication in the record that the result of the 8 trial would have been favorable to Petitioner if he had represented 9 himself. Because Petitioner cannot demonstrate that the trial 10 court's denial of his Farettta motion prejudiced him, Petitioner's 11 claim must be denied.

12 II. Right to An Impartial Judge

13 Petitioner alleges he was subject to judicial bias, because the 14 judge who decided his Farettta motion was a former prosecutor and had 15 made an appearance in his case seven years earlier. As a result, 16 according to Petitioner, his due process right to an impartial judge 17 was violated. The state court considered this issue in a reasoned 18 opinion on direct appeal.

19 First, the state court set forth Petitioner's key allegations.
 20 Judge Grandaert, who denied Petitioner's Farettta motion, had 21 previously been a deputy district attorney. Opinion at 54. During 22 his time as a deputy D.A., Judge Grandaert made an appearance at a 23 March 2, 1998 hearing in Petitioner's case. Opinion at 55. The 24 hearing was not substantive; rather, it was a routine matter to 25 continue a date. According to Petitioner, Judge Grandaert's earlier 26 appearance rendered him biased in favor of the prosecution on May 4, 27 2005 when he heard and denied Petitioner's Farettta motion. Opinion 28

1 at 54.

2 After first holding that Petitioner's claim of judicial bias 3 was procedurally defaulted, the state court turned to the merits of 4 the claim. Opinion at 57. The court first noted that state law was 5 "unsettled as to whether proof of actual bias is required or if the 6 appearance of bias may be sufficient to establish a due process 7 violation." Opinion at 57 (citing cases). After reviewing the 8 record, the state court found that there was 9 no basis for finding actual bias or an appearance of bias.

 10 More than seven years after the March 2, 1998 hearing, 11 Judge Grandaert heard and ruled on Smart's Faretta 12 motion. Smart does not allege that Judge Grandaert knew 13 or should have recalled that he previously appeared at the 14 March 2, 1998, hearing. Indeed, we do not believe that 15 any reasonable person would expect that the judge would 16 have any recollection of that insignificant hearing. Nor 17 could he have been expected to recognize Smart's name, particularly in light of the fact that, during the Municipal Court proceedings, Smart was formally referred to by his alias, Robert Payne, whereas Smart used his real name at the Faretta hearing. Further, and perhaps most important, there is simply no reason to suspect that one appearance so long ago would have made Judge Grandaert a biased decision maker when he heard and ruled upon the May 4, 2005 motion.

18 Smart contends that "it would be practically 19 impossible" for Judge Grandaert to be unbiased when he 20 heard and ruled on the Faretta motion. However, we have 21 very carefully reviewed the transcript of the Faretta 22 hearing and have found absolutely no evidence of bias.
 Smart also argues that the denial of his Faretta motion 23 is, in and of itself, evidence that Judge Grandaert was 24 biased in favor of the prosecution. Smart reasons that 25 error is more likely to occur during a trial when the defendant represents himself than if he is represented by 26 counsel. Therefore, Smart contends, Judge Grandaert 27 denied the Faretta motion in order [to] increase the likelihood that the jury would return an error-free finding that Smart was sane when the offenses were committed and would thereby deprive Smart of the opportunity to obtain a reversal of the judgment. We reject this remarkably irrational argument. To the extent any judge is motivated by an intention to provide a fair, error-free, trial, that motivation is not evidence of 1 bias.

2 To summarize, we hold that . . . the evidence 3 submitted in support of the petition does not support the 4 allegations that Smart's due process rights were violated when Judge Grandsaert heard and ruled on the Farella motion.

5 Opinion at 58-59.

6 Here, Petitioner has not demonstrated that the state court's 7 reasoned opinion is contrary to, or an unreasonable application of,
 8 clearly established United States Supreme Court law. Petitioner
 9 also fails to demonstrate that the state court's opinion relied on 10 an unreasonable determination of the facts.

11 The due process clause guarantees criminal defendants the right 12 to a fair and impartial judge. In re Murchison, 349 U.S. 133, 136 13 (1955). A claim of judicial misconduct by a state judge in the 14 context of federal habeas review, however, does not simply require 15 that the federal court determine whether the state judge committed 16 judicial misconduct; rather the question is whether the state 17 judge's behavior "rendered the trial so fundamentally unfair as to 18 violate the federal due process clause under the United States 19 Constitution." Duckett v. Godinez, 67 F.3d 734, 740 (9th Cir. 1995) 20 (citations omitted). In addition, federal habeas relief is limited 21 to those instances where there is proof of actual bias, or of a 22 possible temptation so severe that one might presume an actual, 23 substantial incentive to be biased. See, e.g., Del Vecchio v.
 24 Illinois Dep't of Corrections 31 F.3d 1363, 1380 (7th Cir. 1994) (en 25 banc).

26 Petitioner can cite no clearly established Supreme Court law 27 demonstrating that the state court's decision that Judge Grandsaert 28

1 had no actual or apparent bias was unreasonable. Moreover, as the 2 state court concluded, Petitioner cannot demonstrate that the 3 decision by Judge Grandaert to deny Petitioner's Faretta request 4 was harmful to Petitioner; as such, Petitioner cannot show that any 5 action by Judge Grandaert rendered his trial "fundamentally 6 unfair." Duckett, 67 F.3d at 740. Thus, Petitioner's claim must be 7 denied.

8 III. Trial Court's Refusal To Order A New Competency Hearing

9 In this claim, Petitioner maintains that his due process rights 10 were violated when the state trial court refused to hold competency 11 hearings during the sanity phase of Petitioner's trial. The state 12 court considered this claim in a section of its lengthy, reasoned 13 opinion on direct appeal.

14 First, the state court reviewed the factual background of this 15 claim. When the sanity phase of Petitioner's trial<sup>1</sup> commenced on 16 January 16, 2006, defense counsel Chase made a motion to continue 17 the trial in order to hold a competency examination of Petitioner.
 18 Opinion at 26. The prosecutor objected to the motion, noting "that 19 this was the fourth time that Smart had claimed to become 20 incompetent on the eve of trial" and that Petitioner had a history 21 of malingering. Opinion at 27.

22 After the matter was submitted, the trial court 23 reviewed the "extraordinary" history of the case. It 24 noted, among other things, that charges had been filed in 25 April 1998 for offenses that occurred in October 1997, 26 that Smart had been represented by at least four 27 attorneys, that there had been several Marsden motions, 28 and that criminal proceedings had been suspended due to

<sup>1</sup>The guilt and sanity phases of Petitioner's trial were presided over by Judge Hall, not Judge Grandaert.

1 incompetency more than once. The guilt phase finally 2 commenced in October 2003 and the court recalled the 3 following about Smart's appearance at trial: "When Mr.
 4 Smart came into the courtroom on that date, as I recall, 5 he was manifesting a number of physical symptoms and 6 symptomology which included attempting to be frothing at 7 the mouth and acting completely incoherent . . . I made 8 findings and expressed to Mr. Smart the fact that we were 9 in fact going to be proceeding with this trial and the 10 fact that this Court viewed [his conduct] as being an act 11 of malingering, [that] was not going to be accepted or 12 tolerated. [¶] And suddenly Mr. Smart immediately stopped 13 his theatrics and sat through the entirety of the trial 14 . . . ." The court noted that after the guilt phase was 15 completed the trial was continued several times for 16 various reasons including the need to review Smart's 17 "voluminous" medical records from Napa, Atascadero and the 18 jail.

19 The court stated that it had reviewed and considered 20 Chase's declaration, the arguments of counsel, the court 21 file, and its own notes from observations of Smart, and 22 the relevant law and that it had "carefully analyzed this 23 matter." The court acknowledged that Chase had "gone 24 beyond the call in his representation of Mr. Smart," and 25 that it would likely have made this motion had it been in 26 his shoes. Nevertheless, the court denied the request for 27 a competency examination with the following statement:

28 "But from all I have seen at this point, I have not 29 seen a sufficient showing of substantial change in 30 circumstances to warrant at this point a further 31 suspension of proceeding under [§§ 1367-1368] of the Penal 32 Code based upon the prior adjudications in this matter and 33 based upon Mr. Smart's demonstrated pattern of conduct in 34 this very department. That certainly is not saying he 35 doesn't have issues, which we will be addressing during 36 the sanity phases which we will be proceeding on. [¶] So, 37 Mr. Smart, we are going to be proceeding to the sanity 38 phase. So I would urge you to cooperate with Mr. Chase 39 during the course of these proceedings. . . ."

40 Opinion at 27-28.

41 After the trial, defense attorney Chase brought a motion for a 42 new trial arguing that Petitioner was denied a fair trial at the 43 sanity phase because the trial court had not permitted a medical 44 determination as to whether Petitioner was competent to stand trial.
 45 Opinion at 30. The appellate court summarized the trial court's 46

1 findings as follows:

2       The trial court prefaced its ruling by observing that 3 Chase was a tireless advocate and by sharing its view that 4 the rights of criminal defendants are "sacred rights."
5 Then, the court made the following statement: "I will say 6 candidly from my perspective sitting here as a trial 7 judge, both guilt phase and sanity phase, I have never in 8 my entire life in many different careers ever seen an 9 individual who in the Court's assessment has abused the 10 process of the Courts and tried to take advantage of those 11 rights which we set forth for criminal defendants than Mr.
12 Smart. [¶] I find Mr. Smart to be what I would only 13 characterize as a master manipulator who has done 14 everything humanly possible to [set] every conceivable 15 booby trap . . . for any reviewing Court as it relates to 16 the handling for this matter dating back to the time when 17 he first wheeled into Court for the guilt phase in this 18 trial in 2003."

19       The court referred again to Smart's behavior at the 20 commencement of the guilt phase. It also recalled that 21 during the sanity phase, it appeared that Smart 22 intentionally exaggerated his symptoms as he was wheeled 23 closer to the courtroom and that, on another occasion 24 while defense counsel was examining a witness, Smart 25 opened one eye and looked around as if to orient himself.
26 The court also stated that the record was replete with 27 evidence that Smart had been "using and abusing both the 28 criminal justice system as well as the mental health system dating back decades."

1       The court concluded there was not substantial 2 evidence to warrant another medical status examination and 3 stated: "I believe it was a dilatory tactic, and frankly, 4 a very good one done on the part of Mr. Smart much to the 5 dismay of his counsel, but if you look at it objectively 6 made a tremendous amount of sense from Mr. Smart's part 7 because it yet creates another issue for the purpose of 8 appeal in this case." Accordingly, the court denied the 9 new trial motion.

10      Opinion at 31.

11      Finally, the state appellate court analyzed the merits of 12 Petitioner's claim.

13      "[T]rial of an incompetent defendant violates an 14 accused's right to due process.' [Citations.] The United 15 States Supreme Court has defined competence to stand trial 16 as a defendant's "'sufficient present ability to consult 17 with his lawyer with a reasonable degree of rational

1 understanding' and 'a rational as well as factual
 2 understanding of the proceedings against him.'" 3 [Citation.] Under California law, a person is incompetent 4 to stand trial 'if, as a result of a mental disorder or 5 developmental disability, the defendant is unable to 6 understand the nature of the criminal proceedings or to 7 assist counsel in the conduct of a defense in a rational 8 manner.' [Citation.] A defendant is presumed to be 9 mentally competent to stand trial. [Citation]" (People v.
 10 Young (2005) 34 Cal. 4th 1149, 1216.)

11 "When the accused presents substantial evidence of 12 incompetence, due process requires that the trial court 13 conduct a full competency hearing. [Citation.] . . . The 14 court's duty to conduct a competency hearing arises when 15 such evidence is presented at any time 'prior to 16 judgment.' [Citations.] [¶] When a competency hearing has 17 already been held and the defendant has been found 18 competent to stand trial, however, a trial court need not 19 suspend proceedings to conduct a second competency hearing 20 unless it 'is presented with a substantial change of 21 circumstances or with new evidence' casting a serious 22 doubt on the validity of that finding. [Citations.]" 23 (People v. Jones (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1115, 1152-1153 24 (Jones).)

25 In the present case, when Smart made a request for a 26 competency hearing on the first day of the sanity phase of 27 the trial, three prior competency hearings had already 28 been held and a determination made that, as of June 10, 29 2003, Smart was competent to stand trial. Therefore, the 30 trial court was not required to suspend proceedings again 31 and conduct a fourth competency hearing unless it was 32 presented with a "substantial change of circumstance" or 33 with new evidence that cast a "serious doubt" on the 34 validity of the most recent competency finding. (Jones, 35 supra, 53 Cal. 3d at p. 1153.)

36 On appeal, Smart contends that there was a change of 37 circumstances and substantial new evidence which raised a 38 doubt about his competency and required a new competency 39 hearing. We, like the trial court, reject this 40 contention. Smart's behavior at the sanity phase was 41 neither new nor a change of circumstance. His history of 42 engaging in just such conduct whenever he was required to 43 come to court to face a criminal charge was well-44 documented. The trial court was not only familiar with 45 that history, it had observed this type of behavior first-46 hand at the commencement of the guilt phase.

47 Smart attempts to portray his conduct at the sanity 48 phase as new evidence by pointing out that, in contrast to 49 the guilt phase, his symptoms did not disappear after the

1 court advised him that the trial could continue. However,
 2 the evidence shows that Smart did cease his behavior 3 within days after the sanity verdict was announced. As he 4 had done on numerous prior occasions, Smart displayed his 5 symptoms of mental illness for a period during which he 6 believed it benefited [sic] him to appear incompetent. In 7 other words, Smart's behavior at the sanity phase was not 8 a substantial change of circumstance when viewed in the 9 context of his extensive documented history with the 10 criminal justice system.

11 To the extent a distinction can be drawn between 12 Smart's behavior at the sanity phase as compared to his 13 prior behavior at the guilt phase, that distinction does 14 not establish error on the part of the trial court. By 15 the time of the new trial motion, it had become even more 16 apparent to the court that Smart's behavior at the sanity 17 phase was nothing more than a new way to play an old game and that it did not raise a serious doubt about the prior finding of competence. As reflected in the record of the hearing on Smart's new trial motion, the court observed additional signs of malingering during the sanity phases.
 Employees at the jail where Smart was held during this period also observed instances when Smart engaged in behavior which was inconsistent with the notion that his presentation at trial was genuine. Indeed, by conclusion of this trial, there was overwhelming evidence before the court that Smart was intentionally attempting to appear incompetent at the sanity phase. His effort to appear as such, to the extent distinguishable from prior occasions, was not substantial evidence "casting a serious doubt on the validity" of the prior finding that he was competent.

18 Smart repeatedly complains that the trial court erred 19 by relying on its own observations and its own opinion 20 that Smart was a malingerer. In fact, though, the very 21 reason we show deference to a trial court's decision 22 whether to hold a competency hearing once a finding of 23 competence has already been made is that we, as an 24 appellate court, are "in no position to appraise a 25 defendant's conduct in the trial court as indicating 26 insanity, a calculated attempt to feign insanity and delay 27 the proceedings, or sheer temper." [Citations.] (Marshall, supra, 15 Cal. 4th at p. 33.) In this case, when the trial court was presented with the request for a competency examination, it was uniquely qualified to make that determination. Not only was there a documented history of Smart's behavior at other criminal proceedings, the court itself had witnessed that behavior during the beginning of the guilt phase. With that tremendous benefit, the court's observations and assessment of Smart at the sanity phase are particularly valuable and we will

1 not second guess them.

2 We accept and affirm the trial court's determination 3 that Smart's behavior at the sanity phase was not a 4 substantial change of circumstances but part and parcel of 5 a pattern of conduct going back several years. In light 6 of that finding, the court was not required to hold 7 another competency examination during the sanity phase of 8 the trial.

Opinion at 32-34.

Due process requires a trial court to order a psychiatric evaluation or conduct a competency hearing if the court has a good faith doubt concerning the defendant's competence. Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 385 (1996); Cacoperdo v. Demosthenes, 37 F.3d 504, 510 (9th Cir. 1994). This responsibility continues throughout trial. Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162, 181 (1975). A good faith doubt about a defendant's competence arises "'if a reasonable judge, situated as was the trial court judge whose failure to conduct an evidentiary hearing is being reviewed, should have experienced doubt with respect to competency to stand trial.'" Maxwell v. Roe, 606 F.3d 561, 568 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting De Kaplany v. Enomoto, 540 F.2d 975, 983 (9th Cir. 1976)). The doubt must be "genuine," and the simple existence of some evidence indicating possible incompetency does not automatically trigger a hearing. DeKaplany, 540 F.2d at 982-983. A state court's determination that a defendant is competent is a factual finding that is presumed correct. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1); see also Maggio v. Fulford, 462 U.S. 111, 117 (1983).

Here, Petitioner has not demonstrated that the state court's reasoned opinion is contrary to, or an unreasonable application of, clearly established United States Supreme Court law. Petitioner

 2 an unreasonable determination of the facts.

3 As the state court's reasoned opinion clearly demonstrates, the 4 experience and judgment of the trial judge, together with the prior 5 finding of competence and the evidence of prior malingering on 6 Petitioner's part, confirm that it was not unreasonable for the 7 trial court not to conduct another competency hearing. Petitioner's 8 competency had already been determined, and he has not demonstrated 9 that there was a substantial change of circumstances or new evidence 10 casting a serious doubt on the validity of that finding. See Jones, 11 53 Cal. 3d at 1153; Opinion at 33.

12 Petitioner's case may be distinguished from Maxwell, where the 13 Ninth Circuit found that a trial court's failure to conduct 14 additional competency hearings constituted a due process violation.
 15 606 F.3d at 575-576. In Maxwell, the defendant missed a substantial 16 part of his trial after being placed on a fourteen-day psychiatric 17 hold due to a suicide attempt. Id. at 571-572. This hold meant 18 that a mental health professional had determined that Maxwell had a 19 mental disorder that rendered him "a danger to others, or to himself 20 or herself, or gravely disabled." Id. at 572-573 (citing Cal. Welf.
 21 & Inst. Code §§ 5150 & 5240). The Ninth Circuit held that these 22 facts should have triggered a competency hearing and that "[n]o 23 reasonable judge, situated as the state trial judge was here, could 24 have proceeded with the trial without doubting Maxwell's competency 25 to stand trial." Id. at 573.

26 Here, however, no comparable facts were presented to the trial 27 judge. There were no attempts at self-harm by Petitioner, and no 28

1 subsequent psychiatric commitment as a result that caused him to 2 miss important parts of his trial. Moreover, Petitioner had a 3 documented history of malingering and "there was overwhelming 4 evidence before the court that Smart was intentionally attempting to 5 appear incompetent at the sanity phase." Opinion at 33. Therefore, 6 it was not unreasonable for the appeals court to uphold the trial 7 court's finding, and conclude that "Smart's behavior at the sanity 8 phase was not a substantial change of circumstance when viewed in 9 the context of his extensive documented history with the criminal 10 justice system." Opinion at 33. Petitioner's claim must be denied.

11 IV. State Mental Hospital Confinement

12 In claim four, Petitioner maintains that his federal due 13 process and equal protection rights were violated when he was 14 committed pre-trial to a state mental hospital, allegedly for longer 15 than the time period allowed under Cal. Penal Code § 1370(c). The 16 state court addressed this issue in its reasoned opinion on direct 17 appeal.

18 The state court first reviewed the history of Petitioner's 19 commitments and determined that they "ended before expiration of the 20 three-year period" allowed under Cal. Penal Code § 1370(c). Opinion 21 at 35. Petitioner argued on appeal that his mental hospital 22 commitments could not exceed six months, an argument that the state 23 court rejected, finding that under the applicable state law, "the 24 maximum period of confinement in Petitioner's case is three years."
25 Opinion at 37. Relying primarily on People v. Johnson, 145 Cal.
26 App. 4th 895, 904 (2006), the state court denied Petitioner's claim 27 on the merits.

1 Petitioner has failed to state a valid federal claim. A person
 2 in custody pursuant to the judgment of a state court can obtain a 3 federal writ of habeas corpus only on the ground that he is in 4 custody in violation of the Constitution or laws or treaties of the 5 United States. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(a). In other words, "it is only 6 noncompliance with federal law that renders a State's criminal 7 judgment susceptible to collateral attack in the federal courts."
 8 Wilson v. Corcoran, 131 S. Ct. 13, 16 (2010) (emphasis in original).
 9 The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that a federal habeas writ is 10 unavailable for violations of state law or for alleged error in the 11 interpretation or application of state law. See Estelle v. McGuire, 12 502 U.S. 62, 67-68 (1991); Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 119 (1982); 13 Peltier v. Wright, 15 F.3d 860, 861-62 (9th Cir. 1994); see also 14 Little v. Crawford, 449 F.3d 1075, 1082 (9th Cir. 2006) (claim that 15 state supreme court misapplied state law or departed from its 16 earlier decisions does not provide a ground for habeas relief).

17 While violations of state law generally do not implicate 18 federal due process concerns, a state statute may create a protected 19 "liberty interest"; in such cases, the violation of state law raises 20 federal constitutional concerns on federal habeas corpus. See Bonin 21 v. Calderon, 59 F.3d 815, 841 (9th Cir. 1995) (Bonin I). Here, 22 however, Petitioner has not even shown that state law was violated, 23 much less that the state law at issue created a liberty interest 24 protected by federal due process law. As the state court concluded 25 in its reasoned opinion, the state law at issue allowed for 26 Petitioner's confinement in a mental hospital for up to three years, 27 and Petitioner was detained for shorter than the three-year limit.

1 Petitioner cites nothing demonstrating that the state court decision 2 was in error.

3 Because Petitioner has not demonstrated either that the state 4 court's reasoned opinion is contrary to, or an unreasonable
5 application of, clearly established United States Supreme Court law 6 or that the state court's opinion relied on an unreasonable 7 determination of the facts, his claim must be denied.

8 V. Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

9 In claim five, which is related to claim four, Petitioner 10 maintains that his Sixth Amendment rights to effective assistance of 11 counsel were violated when his counsel failed to make a motion 12 challenging his pre-trial commitment at a state mental hospital.
13 According to Petitioner, his commitment was in violation of Cal.
14 Penal Code § 1370(c).<sup>2</sup> The state court denied this claim in its 15 reasoned opinion on direct appeal, holding that because Petitioner 16 had not demonstrated that his commitment was in violation of the 17 applicable law, he had also "not carried his burden of proving 18 either deficient performance or prejudice." Opinion at 40.

19 The Sixth Amendment guarantees the right to effective 20 assistance of counsel. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 686 21 (1984). To prevail on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, 22 Petitioner must show that counsel's performance was deficient and 23 that the deficient performance prejudiced Petitioner's defense. Id.
24 at 688. To prove deficient performance, Petitioner must demonstrate 25

26 <sup>2</sup>Petitioner did make a pro se motion challenging the time of his 27 commitment in the state mental hospital. That motion was denied.
Opinion at 35.

1 that counsel's representation fell below an objective standard of 2 reasonableness under prevailing professional norms. Id. To prove 3 counsel's performance was prejudicial, Petitioner must demonstrate a 4 "reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional 5 errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different. A 6 reasonable probability is a probability sufficient to undermine 7 confidence in the outcome." Id. at 694.

8 Here, Petitioner has not demonstrated that the state court's 9 reasoned opinion is contrary to, or an unreasonable application of,
10 clearly established United States Supreme Court law. Petitioner
11 also fails to demonstrate that the state court's opinion relied on 12 an unreasonable determination of the facts. As stated above, 13 Petitioner has not demonstrated that his pre-trial confinement in a 14 state mental hospital was in violation of state or federal law.
15 Given that Petitioner's confinement was lawful, any motion by 16 Petitioner's trial counsel arguing that it was improper would likely 17 have been denied. Strickland and its progeny do not require that 18 trial counsel make futile objections and, thus, the decision of 19 Petitioner's counsel was reasonable under these circumstances. See 20 Sanders v. Ratelle, 21 F.3d 1446, 1456 (9th Cir. 1994).
21 Furthermore, Petitioner cannot demonstrate that he suffered any 22 prejudice due to his counsel's failure to bring a motion regarding 23 Petitioner's confinement. Given that any motion would have been 24 futile, there is no reasonable probability that, had the motion been 25 made, the result of the proceeding would have been different.
26 Strickland, 466 U.S. at 693-694. Accordingly, Petitioner's claim 27 must be denied.

1 VI. Prior Convictions

2 In claim six, Petitioner maintains that his due process rights 3 under Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000), were violated 4 because the issue of his prior convictions was determined by a judge 5 and not a jury. The state court addressed this issue in its 6 reasoned decision on direct appeal.

7 Smart contends that his constitutional rights were 8 violated during the portion of his trial relating to the 9 prior conviction allegations because the jury that decided 10 the prior conviction allegations was instructed that Smart
 "[was] the person whose name appear[ed] on the documents admitted to establish the convictions."

11 Smart argues this instruction to the jury violated 12 Apprendi v. New Jersey (2000) 530 U.S. 466, 490 13 (Apprendi), which holds that "[o]ther than the fact of a 14 prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for 15 a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be 16 submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable 17 doubt." Smart claims he was entitled to a jury 18 determination as to whether he was the person who suffered 19 the prior convictions alleged in the information.

20 Section 1025 provides that "the question of whether 21 the defendant is the person who has suffered the prior 22 convictions shall be tried by the court without a jury."
 23 (§ 1025, subd. c.) This provision does not violate 24 Apprendi. (People v. Epps (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 19, 23 (Epps) 25 [citations omitted]). As our Supreme Court explained in Epps, supra, 25 Cal. 4th at page 23, the Apprendi rule 26 does not apply to the fact of a prior conviction, and 27 therefore, is not implicated by section 1025. Therefore, 28 we reject Smart's claim that his Apprendi right was violated.

Opinion at 49.

Petitioner has not demonstrated that the state court's reasoned opinion is contrary to, or an unreasonable application of, clearly established United States Supreme Court law. Petitioner also fails to demonstrate that the state court's opinion relied on an unreasonable determination of the facts.

1       As the state court confirmed, Apprendi holds that any fact that 2 increases the penalty for a crime must be determined by a jury 3 except for "the fact of a prior conviction." 530 U.S. at 490. As 4 Apprendi and subsequent cases have made clear, the fact of a prior 5 conviction is a sentencing factor that may be relied upon to enhance 6 a sentence without being submitted to a jury or proved beyond a 7 reasonable doubt. Id.; United States v. Pacheco-Zepeda, 234 F.3d 8 411, 414-415 (9th Cir. 2001) (relying on Apprendi to hold prior 9 convictions, whether or not admitted by defendant on record, are 10 sentencing factors rather than elements of charged crime).

11 Accordingly, Petitioner's claim that his prior convictions needed to 12 be determined true by a jury is without merit and must be denied.

13 VII. Length of Sentence

14       In claim seven, Petitioner maintains that his Eighth Amendment 15 rights against cruel and unusual punishment were violated by the 16 imposition of a sentence of seventy-five years to life for his 17 conviction for three counts of indecent exposure with a prior 18 conviction for the same offense. The state court addressed this 19 issue in its reasoned opinion on direct appeal.

20       Smart contends that his Three Strikes sentence 21 violates both the federal and state prohibitions against 22 cruel and unusual punishment.

23       "Under the federal Constitution, the issue is whether 24 the sentence is 'grossly disproportionate' to the crime.
 25 [Citation.] Under the state Constitution, the issue is 26 whether the sentence 'is so disproportionate to the crime 27 for which it is inflicted that it shocks the conscience 28 and offends fundamental notions of human dignity.'
 29 [Citation.]" (People v. Gray (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 973, 992 (Gray).) FN13.

30       In In re Lynch (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 410 (Lynch), our 31 Supreme Court articulated a three-prong inquiry for 32

1 measuring proportionality pursuant to which courts 2 (1) consider the nature of the offense and offender, 3 (2) compare the punishment with the penalty for more 4 serious crimes in the same jurisdiction, and (3) compare 5 the punishment to the penalty for the same offense in 6 different jurisdictions. Before we apply the Lynch factors 7 in the present case, we summarily reject Smart's 8 remarkable claim that his case is virtually 9 indistinguishable from Lynch and that this court is 10 therefore required by principles of stare decision [sic] 11 to hold that his sentence constitutes cruel and unusual 12 punishment. The distinctions between the present case and 13 Lynch are too numerous and too obvious to merit discussion 14 here. FN14.

15 Turning to the first prong of the Lynch inquiry, Smart 16 characterizes recidivist indecent exposure as "trivial," a 17 nuisance type of offense which causes embarrassment but no 18 physical or psychological harm. We reject this wishful 19 thinking and superficial analysis of the first prong of 20 the Lynch test. To properly evaluate Smart's offenses, we 21 consider the totality of the circumstances surrounding 22 those offenses, including such factors as motive, the 23 manner in which the offenses were committed, the extent of 24 the defendant's involvement and the consequences of his 25 acts. (People v. Dillon (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 441, 479.) Furthermore, our consideration of the nature of the offense and offender must also take into account the offender's recidivist behavior. (Gray, supra, 66, Cal.
 App. 4th at p. 992; People v. Cartwright (1995) 39 Cal.
 App. 4th 1123, 1136.)

26 Smart's present offenses were all committed against 27 women under circumstances which created a potential for 28 aggression or violence. Smart confronted his victims in 29 secluded places during times they were likely to be alone 30 and vulnerable. The first time he exposed himself to Nancy 31 Pangilinan, Smart behaved aggressively, walked straight up 32 to her car door and forced her to almost hit him in order 33 to get away. Smart approached Katrina Stanley's home late 34 at night and exposed himself to her after he could see 35 that she was alone. Smart then exposed himself to 36 Pangilinan a second time in the same location as before 37 which indicates he may have been stalking her or intended 38 to escalate his aggression. Thus, the totality of the 39 circumstances relating to these current offenses strongly suggests that Smart created situations in which the potential for aggression or violence was very real.

40 Furthermore, Smart's recidivist history is remarkable 41 and evidences a pattern of sexually charged criminal 42 behavior which is far from trivial. Smart was 18 years old 43 when he was first convicted of indecent exposure in 1959.

1 He suffered two additional exposure convictions in 1963,
 2 notwithstanding his claim that he was just relieving 3 himself in public. A 1968 exposure and trespassing 4 conviction related to crimes Smart committed near the 5 grounds of a convalescent hospital. He was arrested for 6 indecent exposure in April 1980, June 1980, and October 7 1980, and each time pled to other offenses. The October 8 1980 incident involved allegations that Smart tried to 9 force his way into an apartment where an 11-year-old girl 10 and her younger sister were home alone. Smart was arrested 11 for burglary and attempted sexual assault in October 1982 12 after breaking into an apartment, awaking the female 13 occupant, and attempting to forcibly restrain her while 14 holding a knife. Smart fled when the woman fought back but 15 was subsequently found and arrested. In 1991, Smart was 16 charged with raping a 70-year-old woman. There was 17 evidence of both physical and emotional abuse of the 18 victim who had limited mobility because of a prior hip 19 operation and who pleaded with Smart that she was just "an 20 old lady." Although Smart was declared incompetent to 21 stand trial, he was subsequently found competent and was 22 convicted of the rape.

23 Smart's criminal history is not limited to sex 24 offenses. His other numerous convictions include burglary 25 and auto theft in 1961, burglary and larceny in 1963, 26 three burglaries in 1965, and loitering and narcotics 27 violations in 1967. In 1969, Smart was also charged with 28 burglary in Louisiana, but jumped bail and fled the State.
 He was apprehended the following month in Minnesota after he was arrested for receiving stolen property. After serving a sentence in Minnesota, Smart was returned to Louisiana where he was committed to a state hospital for six years. During that time, Smart wrote letters threatening President Ford's life. Smart later explained he wrote the letters so he could be transferred to a federal facility. Before he could be tried on the federal charges, Smart escaped from the state hospital. Smart was arrested in California in 1976 and was convicted on the federal charges in 1977. He was also convicted of defrauding an innkeeper in 1982 and burglary in 1984.

29 In light of this and other evidence before us, the 30 first prong of the Lynch test, requiring consideration of 31 the offenses and offender, including in this case Smart's 32 very troubling criminal history, does not support Smart's 33 claim that his sentence is unconstitutionally 34 disproportionate to his crimes.

35 Turning to the second prong of the Lynch test, Smart 36 contends that his sentence for indecent exposure is "out 37 of balance with the punishment prescribed by California 38 law for offenses which must be deemed more serious."

However, case law establishes that "a comparison of appellant's punishment for his current crimes with the punishment for other crimes in California is 'inapposite since it is his recidivism in combination with his current crimes that places him under the three strikes law.'" (Gray, supra, 66 Cal. App. 4th at p. 993; People v. Ayon (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 385, 400, disapproved on other ground by People v. Deloza (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 585, 600.) In other words, a comparison of Smart's punishment for his offenses, which includes his recidivist behavior, to the punishment of others who have committed more serious crimes but have not qualified as repeat offenders is neither logical nor meaningful. (Ayon, supra, 46 Cal. App. 4th at p. 400.)

Smart purports to apply the third prong of the Lynch test by comparing his sentence to potential sentences for recidivist indecent exposure in other jurisdictions. This comparison fails, as a factual matter, because Smart's Three Strikes sentence is not based solely on the fact that he has been convicted of recidivist exposure. Smart's prior strikes are for rape and felony burglary. In other words, we firmly reject Smart's effort to portray himself as nothing more than a harmless flasher.

In considering the third prong of the Lynch test we follow authority establishing that "a comparison of California's punishment for recidivists with punishment for recidivists in other states shows that many of the statutory schemes provide for life imprisonment for repeat offenders, and several states provide for life imprisonment without possibility of parole. California's scheme is part of a nationwide pattern of statutes calling for severe punishments for recidivist offenders. [Citation.]" (People v. Cline (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1327, 1338; see also Gray, supra, 66 Cal. App. 4th at p. 993.)

For all of these reasons, we hold that Smart has failed to establish that his sentence violates either the federal or state Constitutional prohibitions against cruel and inhuman punishment.

FN13. Smart does not separately address his federal constitutional claims but contends that the standard under the federal constitution is substantially the same as the California standard.

FN14. We note, simply by way of example, that the exposure conviction in Lynch was based on proof that a carhop waitress who had not been summoned approached defendant's car and saw him fondling his penis through his open fly while reading a pornographic magazine. (Lynch,

1       supra, 8 Cal. 3rd at p. 438.) The Lynch defendant had a 2 single prior exposure conviction. The Lynch defendant did 3 not receive a three strikes sentence but, rather, a one year to life sentence pursuant to a statute that was no longer in effect when Smart was sentenced.

4       Opinion at 49-53 (footnotes in original).

5       Petitioner cannot demonstrate that the California Court of 6 Appeal's reasoned decision was contrary to, or involved an 7 unreasonable application of, clearly established United States
 8 Supreme Court law. Nor can he demonstrate that the state court's 9 factual findings were unreasonable. Petitioner can cite no clearly 10 established law indicating that the state court decision was in 11 error.

12       Rather, the state court's reasoning is in accord with the 13 applicable law. Neither the Supreme Court nor the Ninth Circuit has 14 held that California's three strikes laws violate the Eighth 15 Amendment, and the Supreme Court has upheld sentences in habeas 16 cases involving three strikes sentences. Lockyer v. Andrade, 538 17 U.S. 63, 68 (2003); Ewing v. California, 538 U.S. 11, 19-20 (2003).
 18 Indeed, in Andrade, the Supreme Court upheld the sentence of a 19 California petitioner who was convicted on two counts of petty theft 20 and sentenced to life in prison under the three strikes law, 21 concluding it was not one of the "exceedingly rare" and "extreme" 22 punishments that violates the Eighth Amendment. 538 U.S. at 73.
 23 While the Eighth Amendment forbids sentences that are grossly 24 disproportionate to the crime, a criminal defendant's history of 25 recidivism is an important factor of the proportionality equation.
 26 Ewing, 538 U.S. at 29 (confirming importance of a petitioner's "long 27 history of felony recidivism" in an Eighth Amendment analysis).

1 "[T]he presence of violence on a petitioner's record seems an 2 extremely important focal point for proportionality review." Taylor 3 v. Lewis, 460 F.3d 1093, 1100 (9th Cir. 2006).

4 In this case, given the applicable law, Petitioner's record, and 5 the nature of his prior criminal history -- recidivist exposure, 6 rape, felony burglary -- the state court's conclusion that 7 Petitioner's sentence was not unconstitutionally disproportionate to 8 his crimes was not unreasonable. Accordingly, Petitioner can show 9 no Eighth Amendment violation and his claim must be denied.

10 CONCLUSION

11 For the foregoing reasons, the Petition for a writ of habeas 12 corpus is DENIED. Furthermore, for the reasons stated in this 13 Order, a Certificate of Appealability is DENIED. See Rule 11(a) of 14 the Rules Governing Section 2254 Cases. Petitioner may not appeal 15 the denial of a Certificate of Appealability in this Court, but may 16 seek a certificate from the Ninth Circuit under Rule 22 of the 17 Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. Id.

18 The Clerk of Court shall terminate all pending motions as moot, 19 enter Judgment in accordance with this Order and close the file.
